

SATURDAY, JULY 27, 1925

(From Wednesday's Daily Herald)

There was not a very large attendance at the Fair grounds, yesterday, though it was a paying crowd, if one might judge by the severity of dead heads, the reporters' being refused admission without paying the usual gate fee. It is a good idea, and the reporter of THE HERALD, at least, trusts that the management will adopt it as a permanent rule.

The first race was a half-mile dash between Chance and Santa Fe. In the pools, Chance was the favorite three and four to one. On the course, letting was lively, at about the same odds in favor of Chance as in the pools. Both horses got off well together at the start, with Santa Fe slightly in the lead, which he held throughout, winning the dash and race by a half neck in fifty seconds.

The second race was between Shoo Fly and Fanny Turner, mile dash. Turner was the favorite at two and three to one, but like Chance, was failed to fulfill the expectations raised by her friends, and Shoo Fly passed under the string a few feet ahead, in 1:50.

The day's sport closed with a three hundred yard dash between Ghost and Idlewild. Idlewild was the favorite at two to one, and shared the fate of the other favorites, the Ghost showing a clean pair of heels, and passing under the string a few feet in advance.

Who Will Explain It?

A singular scene was presented to a number of gentlemen yesterday. On cutting a fine, large watermelon, cut off in the center was a small, yellow spotted lizard, about four inches in length. Apparently when taken out, it was soon resurrected on being placed in the sun, but lived only a few minutes. It was of a beautiful brown color, with white stripes and yellow spots. Most singular of all, like the fish caught in the midwestern rivers of the Mammoth Cave, in Kentucky, it was dead, however, not having any reliable information as to his whereabouts, the party concluded to camp for the night, concealing themselves in the timber.

In the morning, having been informed by a young man that the object of their search was at a stone some five miles distant, they started at full speed for that place, and arriving there surrounded the stone, but they were again doomed to disappointment, as McKinley was not there. Fearing that their man would get away, they wheeled around and paid a visit to the house of one Moody, situated on the outskirts of the "spook" where they arrived in about twenty minutes, and on an enthusiastic approach, and surrounding the house they espied McKinley's horse hitched near by. Upon this, every man drew his revolver and with them cocked entered the house stealthily, where they found McKinley lying asleep in one of the rooms. Before he awakened he was covered by three or four revolvers, the rest of the party having remained outside the house. On finding himself surrounded he attempted to reach under his pillow for his arms, but on being told to surrender he did so, offering no resistance when the handcuffs were placed on him. He was brought to the city yesterday evening and lodged in jail, where he will be held to answer several charges preferred against him, one of which is the shooting of Mr. Steve Moore, merchant, at Mesquite, in the neck, last fall, although not fatally wounding him. He will be brought before Judge Burford this morning, and undergo a preliminary examination.

Another Plea for Hemp.

A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

From Mr. F. W. Owens, who arrived in the city this morning, THE HERALD has been furnished with the particulars of a dastardly murder which was committed yesterday evening about seven o'clock, on Garret Prairie, near the forks of the Trinity, about ten miles from the city.

It appears that late in the afternoon Mr. Columbus Clark, who resides in the neighborhood, was riding toward home, when he espied a man walking in the road, coming toward him. As soon as the man perceived Mr. Clark, he left the road and struck across the prairie. Suspecting that something was wrong, Mr. Clark rode rapidly home, and found that the house had been entered during his absence, and the quantity of wearing apparel stolen. He immediately retraced his steps, in pursuit of the thief, stopping at the house of a neighbor, and informing them of his loss. Two brothers, named Lively, volunteered to join in the pursuit, one of them, Edward, going into the house to load his gun, and the other, John, Mr. Clark, on horseback, to follow the thief. After loading his gun, Edward Lively directed his steps to a clump of timber not far from the house thinking the thief had entered it for concealment. He had scarcely struck the edge of the timber when the thief emerged from behind a tree, and drawing a short-barreled revolver, fired the fatal shot, which struck Lively in the mouth, and ranging downward, severed the jugular vein. Immediately on hearing the shot, Clark and his companion hurried to the spot from whence the shot was fired, and found Lively weeping in a pool of blood. Although conscious when they arrived, he was too feeble to give any particulars, and in a few minutes breathed his last.

Search was instantly made for the murderer, but although his tracks were plainly visible, he could nowhere be discovered. A pair of saddlebags belonging to him, in which were several bullet holes, were found a short distance from the murder scene, and contained a few trilling rags and a memorandum. No clew could be obtained from the murderer, who was a man of about thirty years of age, and was dressed in a light-colored suit, and was wearing a hat.

—Recalled that the fact of having registered and voted for municipal officers does not entitle a voter to the coming election for delegates to the Constitutional Convention. Those desiring to vote must register before the County Clerk, who have not already done so.

—The murderer of Edward Lively has not yet been arrested, nor has any definite information been received of his whereabouts. Sheriff Barkley yesterday dispatched two deputies in quest of him, with orders to scour the country from Red river to the Rio Grande but what they caught him, and to keep the chase up if it took six months.

—Texas Advertisers and Business Culture. THE HERALD is in receipt of the number of the above work for the Spring and Summer trade of 1925. This publication was established by its present editor and proprietor, Mr. C. E. Van Horn, in 1873, and has been published regularly ever since. It issues 10,000 copies, and is distributed throughout the State and elsewhere, and has for its object the encouragement of immigration to our midst. Its editorials on the City of Dallas and Dallas County, we feel satisfied will result in good to this special location.

—Detentions. Sheriff Barkley yesterday arrested several merchants doing business in the city, for failure to pay their State occupation tax. In addition to the annoyance and trouble, of course the expense was more than doubled. Those who have failed to pay their occupation tax will do well to attend to it at once, as Major Barkley is determined to make no discriminations, and will proceed to arrest all parties who fail to pay promptly.

—An Expensive Watermelon. Yesterday a farmer named John Talbot, residing near this place, was arrested and brought before Judge Burford charged with stealing watermelon from the garden of a neighbor.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

WEEKLY HERALD

SATURDAY, JULY 27, 1925

(From Wednesday's Daily Herald)

There was not a very large attendance at the Fair grounds, yesterday, though it was a paying crowd, if one might judge by the severity of dead heads, the reporters' being refused admission without paying the usual gate fee. It is a good idea, and the reporter of THE HERALD, at least, trusts that the management will adopt it as a permanent rule.

The first race was a half-mile dash between Chance and Santa Fe. In the pools, Chance was the favorite three and four to one. On the course, letting was lively, at about the same odds in favor of Chance as in the pools. Both horses got off well together at the start, with Santa Fe slightly in the lead, which he held throughout, winning the dash and race by a half neck in fifty seconds.

The second race was between Shoo Fly and Fanny Turner, mile dash. Turner was the favorite at two and three to one, but like Chance, was failed to fulfill the expectations raised by her friends, and Shoo Fly passed under the string a few feet ahead, in 1:50.

The day's sport closed with a three hundred yard dash between Ghost and Idlewild. Idlewild was the favorite at two to one, and shared the fate of the other favorites, the Ghost showing a clean pair of heels, and passing under the string a few feet in advance.

Who Will Explain It?

A singular scene was presented to a number of gentlemen yesterday. On cutting a fine, large watermelon, cut off in the center was a small, yellow spotted lizard, about four inches in length. Apparently when taken out, it was soon resurrected on being placed in the sun, but lived only a few minutes. It was of a beautiful brown color, with white stripes and yellow spots. Most singular of all, like the fish caught in the midwestern rivers of the Mammoth Cave, in Kentucky, it was dead, however, not having any reliable information as to his whereabouts, the party concluded to camp for the night, concealing themselves in the timber.

In the morning, having been informed by a young man that the object of their search was at a stone some five miles distant, they started at full speed for that place, and arriving there surrounded the stone, but they were again doomed to disappointment, as McKinley was not there. Fearing that their man would get away, they wheeled around and paid a visit to the house of one Moody, situated on the outskirts of the "spook" where they arrived in about twenty minutes, and on an enthusiastic approach, and surrounding the house they espied McKinley's horse hitched near by. Upon this, every man drew his revolver and with them cocked entered the house stealthily, where they found McKinley lying asleep in one of the rooms. Before he awakened he was covered by three or four revolvers, the rest of the party having remained outside the house. On finding himself surrounded he attempted to reach under his pillow for his arms, but on being told to surrender he did so, offering no resistance when the handcuffs were placed on him. He was brought to the city yesterday evening and lodged in jail, where he will be held to answer several charges preferred against him, one of which is the shooting of Mr. Steve Moore, merchant, at Mesquite, in the neck, last fall, although not fatally wounding him. He will be brought before Judge Burford this morning, and undergo a preliminary examination.

Another Plea for Hemp.

A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

From Mr. F. W. Owens, who arrived in the city this morning, THE HERALD has been furnished with the particulars of a dastardly murder which was committed yesterday evening about seven o'clock, on Garret Prairie, near the forks of the Trinity, about ten miles from the city.

It appears that late in the afternoon Mr. Columbus Clark, who resides in the neighborhood, was riding toward home, when he espied a man walking in the road, coming toward him. As soon as the man perceived Mr. Clark, he left the road and struck across the prairie. Suspecting that something was wrong, Mr. Clark rode rapidly home, and found that the house had been entered during his absence, and the quantity of wearing apparel stolen. He immediately retraced his steps, in pursuit of the thief, stopping at the house of a neighbor, and informing them of his loss. Two brothers, named Lively, volunteered to join in the pursuit, one of them, Edward, going into the house to load his gun, and the other, John, Mr. Clark, on horseback, to follow the thief. After loading his gun, Edward Lively directed his steps to a clump of timber not far from the house thinking the thief had entered it for concealment. He had scarcely struck the edge of the timber when the thief emerged from behind a tree, and drawing a short-barreled revolver, fired the fatal shot, which struck Lively in the mouth, and ranging downward, severed the jugular vein. Immediately on hearing the shot, Clark and his companion hurried to the spot from whence the shot was fired, and found Lively weeping in a pool of blood. Although conscious when they arrived, he was too feeble to give any particulars, and in a few minutes breathed his last.

Search was instantly made for the murderer, but although his tracks were plainly visible, he could nowhere be discovered. A pair of saddlebags belonging to him, in which were several bullet holes, were found a short distance from the murder scene, and contained a few trilling rags and a memorandum. No clew could be obtained from the murderer, who was a man of about thirty years of age, and was dressed in a light-colored suit, and was wearing a hat.

—Recalled that the fact of having registered and voted for municipal officers does not entitle a voter to the coming election for delegates to the Constitutional Convention. Those desiring to vote must register before the County Clerk, who have not already done so.

—The murderer of Edward Lively has not yet been arrested, nor has any definite information been received of his whereabouts. Sheriff Barkley yesterday dispatched two deputies in quest of him, with orders to scour the country from Red river to the Rio Grande but what they caught him, and to keep the chase up if it took six months.

—Texas Advertisers and Business Culture. THE HERALD is in receipt of the number of the above work for the Spring and Summer trade of 1925. This publication was established by its present editor and proprietor, Mr. C. E. Van Horn, in 1873, and has been published regularly ever since. It issues 10,000 copies, and is distributed throughout the State and elsewhere, and has for its object the encouragement of immigration to our midst. Its editorials on the City of Dallas and Dallas County, we feel satisfied will result in good to this special location.

—Detentions. Sheriff Barkley yesterday arrested several merchants doing business in the city, for failure to pay their State occupation tax. In addition to the annoyance and trouble, of course the expense was more than doubled. Those who have failed to pay their occupation tax will do well to attend to it at once, as Major Barkley is determined to make no discriminations, and will proceed to arrest all parties who fail to pay promptly.

—An Expensive Watermelon. Yesterday a farmer named John Talbot, residing near this place, was arrested and brought before Judge Burford charged with stealing watermelon from the garden of a neighbor.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

WEEKLY HERALD

SATURDAY, JULY 27, 1925

(From Wednesday's Daily Herald)

There was not a very large attendance at the Fair grounds, yesterday, though it was a paying crowd, if one might judge by the severity of dead heads, the reporters' being refused admission without paying the usual gate fee. It is a good idea, and the reporter of THE HERALD, at least, trusts that the management will adopt it as a permanent rule.

The first race was a half-mile dash between Chance and Santa Fe. In the pools, Chance was the favorite three and four to one. On the course, letting was lively, at about the same odds in favor of Chance as in the pools. Both horses got off well together at the start, with Santa Fe slightly in the lead, which he held throughout, winning the dash and race by a half neck in fifty seconds.

The second race was between Shoo Fly and Fanny Turner, mile dash. Turner was the favorite at two and three to one, but like Chance, was failed to fulfill the expectations raised by her friends, and Shoo Fly passed under the string a few feet ahead, in 1:50.

The day's sport closed with a three hundred yard dash between Ghost and Idlewild. Idlewild was the favorite at two to one, and shared the fate of the other favorites, the Ghost showing a clean pair of heels, and passing under the string a few feet in advance.

Who Will Explain It?

A singular scene was presented to a number of gentlemen yesterday. On cutting a fine, large watermelon, cut off in the center was a small, yellow spotted lizard, about four inches in length. Apparently when taken out, it was soon resurrected on being placed in the sun, but lived only a few minutes. It was of a beautiful brown color, with white stripes and yellow spots. Most singular of all, like the fish caught in the midwestern rivers of the Mammoth Cave, in Kentucky, it was dead, however, not having any reliable information as to his whereabouts, the party concluded to camp for the night, concealing themselves in the timber.

In the morning, having been informed by a young man that the object of their search was at a stone some five miles distant, they started at full speed for that place, and arriving there surrounded the stone, but they were again doomed to disappointment, as McKinley was not there. Fearing that their man would get away, they wheeled around and paid a visit to the house of one Moody, situated on the outskirts of the "spook" where they arrived in about twenty minutes, and on an enthusiastic approach, and surrounding the house they espied McKinley's horse hitched near by. Upon this, every man drew his revolver and with them cocked entered the house stealthily, where they found McKinley lying asleep in one of the rooms. Before he awakened he was covered by three or four revolvers, the rest of the party having remained outside the house. On finding himself surrounded he attempted to reach under his pillow for his arms, but on being told to surrender he did so, offering no resistance when the handcuffs were placed on him. He was brought to the city yesterday evening and lodged in jail, where he will be held to answer several charges preferred against him, one of which is the shooting of Mr. Steve Moore, merchant, at Mesquite, in the neck, last fall, although not fatally wounding him. He will be brought before Judge Burford this morning, and undergo a preliminary examination.

Another Plea for Hemp.

A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

From Mr. F. W. Owens, who arrived in the city this morning, THE HERALD has been furnished with the particulars of a dastardly murder which was committed yesterday evening about seven o'clock, on Garret Prairie, near the forks of the Trinity, about ten miles from the city.

It appears that late in the afternoon Mr. Columbus Clark, who resides in the neighborhood, was riding toward home, when he espied a man walking in the road, coming toward him. As soon as the man perceived Mr. Clark, he left the road and struck across the prairie. Suspecting that something was wrong, Mr. Clark rode rapidly home, and found that the house had been entered during his absence, and the quantity of wearing apparel stolen. He immediately retraced his steps, in pursuit of the thief, stopping at the house of a neighbor, and informing them of his loss. Two brothers, named Lively, volunteered to join in the pursuit, one of them, Edward, going into the house to load his gun, and the other, John, Mr. Clark, on horseback, to follow the thief. After loading his gun, Edward Lively directed his steps to a clump of timber not far from the house thinking the thief had entered it for concealment. He had scarcely struck the edge of the timber when the thief emerged from behind a tree, and drawing a short-barreled revolver, fired the fatal shot, which struck Lively in the mouth, and ranging downward, severed the jugular vein. Immediately on hearing the shot, Clark and his companion hurried to the spot from whence the shot was fired, and found Lively weeping in a pool of blood. Although conscious when they arrived, he was too feeble to give any particulars, and in a few minutes breathed his last.

Search was instantly made for the murderer, but although his tracks were plainly visible, he could nowhere be discovered. A pair of saddlebags belonging to him, in which were several bullet holes, were found a short distance from the murder scene, and contained a few trilling rags and a memorandum. No clew could be obtained from the murderer, who was a man of about thirty years of age, and was dressed in a light-colored suit, and was wearing a hat.

—Recalled that the fact of having registered and voted for municipal officers does not entitle a voter to the coming election for delegates to the Constitutional Convention. Those desiring to vote must register before the County Clerk, who have not already done so.

—The murderer of Edward Lively has not yet been arrested, nor has any definite information been received of his whereabouts. Sheriff Barkley yesterday dispatched two deputies in quest of him, with orders to scour the country from Red river to the Rio Grande but what they caught him, and to keep the chase up if it took six months.

—Texas Advertisers and Business Culture. THE HERALD is in receipt of the number of the above work for the Spring and Summer trade of 1925. This publication was established by its present editor and proprietor, Mr. C. E. Van Horn, in 1873, and has been published regularly ever since. It issues 10,000 copies, and is distributed throughout the State and elsewhere, and has for its object the encouragement of immigration to our midst. Its editorials on the City of Dallas and Dallas County, we feel satisfied will result in good to this special location.

—Detentions. Sheriff Barkley yesterday arrested several merchants doing business in the city, for failure to pay their State occupation tax. In addition to the annoyance and trouble, of course the expense was more than doubled. Those who have failed to pay their occupation tax will do well to attend to it at once, as Major Barkley is determined to make no discriminations, and will proceed to arrest all parties who fail to pay promptly.

—An Expensive Watermelon. Yesterday a farmer named John Talbot, residing near this place, was arrested and brought before Judge Burford charged with stealing watermelon from the garden of a neighbor.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

WEEKLY HERALD

SATURDAY, JULY 27, 1925

(From Wednesday's Daily Herald)

There was not a very large attendance at the Fair grounds, yesterday, though it was a paying crowd, if one might judge by the severity of dead heads, the reporters' being refused admission without paying the usual gate fee. It is a good idea, and the reporter of THE HERALD, at least, trusts that the management will adopt it as a permanent rule.

The first race was a half-mile dash between Chance and Santa Fe. In the pools, Chance was the favorite three and four to one. On the course, letting was lively, at about the same odds in favor of Chance as in the pools. Both horses got off well together at the start, with Santa Fe slightly in the lead, which he held throughout, winning the dash and race by a half neck in fifty seconds.

The second race was between Shoo Fly and Fanny Turner, mile dash. Turner was the favorite at two and three to one, but like Chance, was failed to fulfill the expectations raised by her friends, and Shoo Fly passed under the string a few feet ahead, in 1:50.

The day's sport closed with a three hundred yard dash between Ghost and Idlewild. Idlewild was the favorite at two to one, and shared the fate of the other favorites, the Ghost showing a clean pair of heels, and passing under the string a few feet in advance.

Who Will Explain It?

A singular scene was presented to a number of gentlemen yesterday. On cutting a fine, large watermelon, cut off in the center was a small, yellow spotted lizard, about four inches in length. Apparently when taken out, it was soon resurrected on being placed in the sun, but lived only a few minutes. It was of a beautiful brown color, with white stripes and yellow spots. Most singular of all, like the fish caught in the midwestern rivers of the Mammoth Cave, in Kentucky, it was dead, however, not having any reliable information as to his whereabouts, the party concluded to camp for the night, concealing themselves in the timber.

In the morning, having been informed by a young man that the object of their search was at a stone some five miles distant, they started at full speed for that place, and arriving there surrounded the stone, but they were again doomed to disappointment, as McKinley was not there. Fearing that their man would get away, they wheeled around and paid a visit to the house of one Moody, situated on the outskirts of the "spook" where they arrived in about twenty minutes, and on an enthusiastic approach, and surrounding the house they espied McKinley's horse hitched near by. Upon this, every man drew his revolver and with them cocked entered the house stealthily, where they found McKinley lying asleep in one of the rooms. Before he awakened he was covered by three or four revolvers, the rest of the party having remained outside the house. On finding himself surrounded he attempted to reach under his pillow for his arms, but on being told to surrender he did so, offering no resistance when the handcuffs were placed on him. He was brought to the city yesterday evening and lodged in jail, where he will be held to answer several charges preferred against him, one of which is the shooting of Mr. Steve Moore, merchant, at Mesquite, in the neck, last fall, although not fatally wounding him. He will be brought before Judge Burford this morning, and undergo a preliminary examination.

Another Plea for Hemp.

A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

From Mr. F. W. Owens, who arrived in the city this morning, THE HERALD has been furnished with the particulars of a dastardly murder which was committed yesterday evening about seven o'clock, on Garret Prairie, near the forks of the Trinity, about ten miles from the city.

It appears that late in the afternoon Mr. Columbus Clark, who resides in the neighborhood, was riding toward home, when he espied a man walking in the road, coming toward him. As soon as the man perceived Mr. Clark, he left the road and struck across the prairie. Suspecting that something was wrong, Mr. Clark rode rapidly home, and found that the house had been entered during his absence, and the quantity of wearing apparel stolen. He immediately retraced his steps, in pursuit of the thief, stopping at the house of a neighbor, and informing them of his loss. Two brothers, named Lively, volunteered to join in the pursuit, one of them, Edward, going into the house to load his gun, and the other, John, Mr. Clark, on horseback, to follow the thief. After loading his gun, Edward Lively directed his steps to a clump of timber not far from the house thinking the thief had entered it for concealment. He had scarcely struck the edge of the timber when the thief emerged from behind a tree, and drawing a short-barreled revolver, fired the fatal shot, which struck Lively in the mouth, and ranging downward, severed the jugular vein. Immediately on hearing the shot, Clark and his companion hurried to the spot from whence the shot was fired, and found Lively weeping in a pool of blood. Although conscious when they arrived, he was too feeble to give any particulars, and in a few minutes breathed his last.

Search was instantly made for the murderer, but although his tracks were plainly visible, he could nowhere be discovered. A pair of saddlebags belonging to him, in which were several bullet holes, were found a short distance from the murder scene, and contained a few trilling rags and a memorandum. No clew could be obtained from the murderer, who was a man of about thirty years of age, and was dressed in a light-colored suit, and was wearing a hat.

—Recalled that the fact of having registered and voted for municipal officers does not entitle a voter to the coming election for delegates to the Constitutional Convention. Those desiring to vote must register before the County Clerk, who have not already done so.

—The murderer of Edward Lively has not yet been arrested, nor has any definite information been received of his whereabouts. Sheriff Barkley yesterday dispatched two deputies in quest of him, with orders to scour the country from Red river to the Rio Grande but what they caught him, and to keep the chase up if it took six months.

—Texas Advertisers and Business Culture. THE HERALD is in receipt of the number of the above work for the Spring and Summer trade of 1925. This publication was established by its present editor and proprietor, Mr. C. E. Van Horn, in 1873, and has been published regularly ever since. It issues 10,000 copies, and is distributed throughout the State and elsewhere, and has for its object the encouragement of immigration to our midst. Its editorials on the City of Dallas and Dallas County, we feel satisfied will result in good to this special location.

—Detentions. Sheriff Barkley yesterday arrested several merchants doing business in the city, for failure to pay their State occupation tax. In addition to the annoyance and trouble, of course the expense was more than doubled. Those who have failed to pay their occupation tax will do well to attend to it at once, as Major Barkley is determined to make no discriminations, and will proceed to arrest all parties who fail to pay promptly.

—An Expensive Watermelon. Yesterday a farmer named John Talbot, residing near this place, was arrested and brought before Judge Burford charged with stealing watermelon from the garden of a neighbor.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.

—A Thief Kills One of His Pursuers, and Escapes—The People in Pursuit.